Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

1. Claims 1-6 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Nelb, II et al ('094), herein referred to as: Nelb et al in view of Lehmann (DE 4136078). Nelb et al disclose a process for preparing high molecular weight linear polyamides, copolyamides, or polyester-amide block copolymers by melt-mixing lower molecular weight, isocyanate-reactive polyamide, copolyamide, or polyester-amide with blocked aliphatic diisocyanates at a temperature between 150°C and 350°C (Abstract; col 2 lines 36-51; col 3 lines 49-42; col 4 lines 30-34). In particular the blocking agents consist of phenol, lactam, alcohol, or oximes, and resulting diisocyanate is present in an amount between 0.1 to 10% by weight based on low molecular weight polymer (Col 3 lines 43-47; col 4 lines 59-62).
2. The melt mixing is done in twin screw extruder, and although Nelb et al fail to specify a reaction time less than two minutes, column 9 lines 29-31 explain that maximum viscosity is obtained after only four minutes, therefore the position is taken that a permanent increase in molecular weight, i.e. chemical reaction between isocyanate group and isocyanate-reactive group, occurs within two minutes (Col 9 lines 29-31). However, the isocyanate-reactive groups of Nelb et al only comprise carboxylic acid groups.
3. Lehmann also teach a method for producing high molecular weight polyamides by melt mixing blocked polyisocyanate and isocyanate-reactive polyamide in an extruder (Abstract).

Important to note, Lehmann teaches the isocyanate-reactive functionalities present in the polyamide may either consist of carboxylic acid or amino groups. Therefore, it would have been obvious to arrive at applicants' claimed process since Nelb et al teach the molecular weight of isocyanate-reactive polyamides can be increased with blocked polyisocyanate in an extruder, and Lehmann teach polyamide, which is melt-mixed with blocked polyisocyanate in an extruder, may either have functional carboxylic acid or amino functionality.

Response to Arguments

4. Applicant's arguments, filed 9/29/2008, with respect to the rejection of claims 1-6 under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) have been fully considered but are rendered moot in view of the new rejection presented above.

Conclusion

5. Applicant's amendment necessitated the new ground(s) of rejection presented in this Office action. Accordingly, THIS ACTION IS MADE FINAL. See MPEP § 706.07(a). Applicant is reminded of the extension of time policy as set forth in 37 CFR 1.136(a).

6. A shortened statutory period for reply to this final action is set to expire THREE MONTHS from the mailing date of this action. In the event a first reply is filed within TWO MONTHS of the mailing date of this final action and the advisory action is not mailed until after the end of the THREE-MONTH shortened statutory period, then the shortened statutory period will expire on the date the advisory action is mailed, and any extension fee pursuant to 37 CFR 1.136(a) will be calculated from the mailing date of the advisory action. In no event, however, will the statutory period for reply expire later than SIX MONTHS from the date of this final action.
